CASE SYNOPSIS:

Dropbox, founded in April 2007 by Drew Houston and Arash Ferdowsi, officially launched in September 2008. Drew Houston, is the co-founder and CEO of Dropbox, a downloadable application that allowed users to easily share, sync, and store files (photos, documents, videos, etc) across most personal computers and smart phones. The company headquarter is in San Francisco, California. Dropbox is a venture-backed Silicon Valley start up, founded in 2006, that provides online storage and backup services to millions of customers using a “freemium” (free + premium offers) business model. The case recounts Dropbox’s history from conception through mid-2010, when founder/CEO Drew Houston must make strategic decisions about new product features which are rigorously demanded by the users, how to target enterprise customers, and whether to pursue distribution deals with smartphone manufacturers.

Drew Houston graduated from MIT and Ferdowsi dropped out of Harvard to co-found company. The idea was simple but very tough to execute, apart from this they already have around 80 competitors in the market and Mozy, Carbonite was doing very well even they are on the first position.

Despite this they were confident that while entering a competitive market they could succeed. The first generation of cloud storage services was based on simplistic model, where file accesses were redirected over the Internet instead of your computer’s hard drive, but they had a performance advantage of storing files locally and updating a cloud copy in the background using time and bandwidth saving optimizations. The industry is growing decently $76 million in 2007 to $ 715 million in 2011.

After long period and discussion they got their initial funding from YCombinator, a seed fund and incubator. Initially they provide them 2% to 10% as well as monitoring, workspace and introductions to other advisors and investors over a three month period.

Later on they launched BETA version for limited group of users who registered through a simple landing page. They used guerrilla marketing, online marketing, viral marketing.
